

International Studies and Diplomacy

Combine practical experience with professional skills training and top-quality analysis as you prepare for a career in global diplomacy.

This is an intense, high-quality academic experience that addresses key issues of international importance and will equip you with the skills necessary to impact the real world and influence global negotiations.

Our multidisciplinary structure offers access to International Politics, Law, Economics and area studies (especially of Asia, Africa and the Middle East) as well as a wide range of languages. You're given the flexibility to tailor your programme, combining the modules that suit you best.

You'll be taught by people who train entire foreign ministries and excel in negotiation, speech writing and policy analysis. You'll receive hard-to-find media training from professionals with a lifetime experience at the BBC. And you'll have the opportunity to attend a week-long study tour in Geneva where, alongside lectures, you'll network with ambassadors and interact with diplomats from UN institutions. You can even take-up an internship with our social media enterprise and online station, SOAS Radio.

From disarmament conferences at the United Nations building in New York, to war crimes investigations with leading international scholars – studying International Studies and Diplomacy at SOAS provides you with a gateway into the international arena that is shaping today's global relations.
