

Anthropology and Sociology

Join the UK's largest concentration of specialists on Africa, Asia, and the Middle East – and a rich alumni of influential figures.

Anthropology is at the heart of SOAS. We constantly look to broaden horizons, foster cross-cultural perspectives, challenge common assumptions, and engage with issues facing the world today. At SOAS, staff and students alike are driven by an unquenchable curiosity about the world around them. Our programmes aim to fuel that further, by asking big questions – and equipping our students to answer them.

Offering a deep, critical, multi-perspectival study of subjects that are central to human lives and livelihoods, cultures, and identities, our academics aren't just passionate about their discipline. They're highly respected, and contribute considerable expertise to international development agencies, governments, policy makers, museums, and more.

We also invite other globally-renowned scholars to speak at our events, lectures, and seminars, to add to a learning mix that includes tutorials, coursework, and research. Our programmes are diverse and unique. In fact, our Master's in the Anthropology of Food is the only one in the UK, and you can tailor any of our programmes with modules from across SOAS – from development to gender studies.
