

Gender Studies

We don't shy away from challenging and controversial issues. We explore them, debate them, and research ways to tackle them.

Ours is a rare, global exploration of gender studies. At SOAS, we refocus discussions of gender, feminism, and sexuality on the complex specificities of Asia, Africa and the Middle East. Increasingly, policy makers and governing structures around the world understand the need to engage with gender and sexuality – in turn, increasing the value and relevance of our programmes, and our graduates.

Our stimulating and collaborative environment is the perfect backdrop to grapple with these incredibly relevant and important issues. SOAS is a place where analytical thinking is encouraged by our experts and your peers. We're also home to a highly diverse community of staff and students who bring a wealth of different perspectives, backgrounds, and ideas to the debate.

We're also passionate about promoting interdisciplinary research. Areas of interest here span far and wide, but include women's, gender, and sexuality studies with regards to Africa, Asia, and Middle Eastern cultures – as well as anthropology, development, law, languages, cultures, and more. With visiting scholars regularly adding to our mix of expertise, voices, and learning methods, we understand the power of knowledge exchange – not only to students looking to benefit from a breadth of insight, but societies across the globe.
